The document has the potential to become a good paper. However, at its current stage, it is too synthetic and lacks the necessary explanations to understand the results obtained.

The methodology and results require detailed analysis and explanations. For instance, the characterization of the sample—identifying the participants, describing their background and skills, and specifying the circumstances under which the experiments were conducted and the data were obtained. The characterization of the instruments is very generic; questions such as who defined and validated them should be addressed.

Therefore, I believe that the article still requires significant refinement before it can be published. While the practical implications appear relevant, there is a lack of detail on how to achieve the presented results. Additionally, I find the ideas proposed for future work to be potentially interesting, as they could offer a more comprehensive understanding and perspective from the various actors involved.
