First of all, both the topic and the article are interesting, and it is well written. However, I have some notes to address.

1. There is a big difference between the abstract and the content of the article.
2. The historical introduction is quite interesting. However, it would be better to summarize it since the article is focusing on reviewing the features of experimental ovarian rejuvenation.
3. It would be better if the authors discuss the outcomes of PRP generally in the introduction before going to the specific features of the process.
4. Finally, the introduction lacks a clear rationale, and the discussion lacks the statistical significance of the results of the studies that tested PRP.
