

Review of: "International Education and the Crises of Cosmopolitanism and Global Citizenship"

Jocelia Marcelino¹

¹ Pontifícia Universidade Católica do Rio Grande do Sul

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article under evaluation "International Education and the Crises of Cosmopolitanism and Global Citizenship" presents a relevant theme for the discussion about cosmopolitanism, global citizenship, especially in the construction of an international education. The theoretical referential is current, with analyses from authors who deal with the themes in a critical and thorough way. Besides, I emphasize that the text is very well written and the ideas are connected between the paragraphs and the sections. Thus, the reading becomes fluid and easy to understand. The text has a good argument, a strong theoretical reference and presents coherence between the author's inferences and the theorists presented.