I would advise changing the title to the following a papal call for peace reflections on Pacem in terris 60 years on. as the current title, while provocative has a tenuous connection to the article, referencing as it does only one sentence in addition the title may mislead The Reader giving them a false impression of both the content of the article and Pope John's encyclical.

I also noticed two grammatical issues one in the abstract when you say that Holy Thursday, April 11, 1963, Pope John XXIII signed it live on the world's television stations. his last and long-awaited encyclical you don't need the it you can just say On Holy Thursday, April 11, 1963, Pope John XXIII signed live on the world's television stations. his last and long-awaited encyclical .

Also when you say that when he was already seriously affected by the symptoms of the disease - stomach cancer - from which he died

It would be better in my opinion to say when he was already seriously affected by the disease - stomach cancer

Although these grammatical suggestions presume that you want the article to follow English grammar conventions and don't intend to publish in any other languages .
