Whilst this is an interesting read, the quality of this paper can greatly be improved by addressing a few key areas. First, not much is mentioned in your literature review on the phenomenon, its issues and why Kurdish's sentiments might be different from others facing similar predicament.

Second, your title features sentiment analysis of opinions about online education. However, other than evaluation of the various algorithms, there is a lack of analyses and findings to clearly reflect the research outcome of the sample drawn from your target population. Third, having a clear outcome would form a basis for a more in-depth and focused discussion on the research's impacts in terms of its implications, contributions, and limitations that would serve to signify the importance of your study. A good start but more needs to be done.
