

Review of: "On the Resilience of Urban Real Estate Development"

Firas Gandah<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Al-Balqa Applied University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article discusses the concept of resilience in urban real estate development and its relevance in the context of an existential crisis such as the COVID-19 pandemic. It also touches on the debate between density and dispersion in urban development and the potential strengths of a less dense built-up environment.

In general, The abstract does have a full meaning. The article provides a concise summary of the study, outlining its main focus, objectives, and methodology. Its clear scope and objectives, thorough literature review, incorporation of empirical evidence or case studies, addressing of counterarguments, provision of actionable recommendations, and seeking of peer review for feedback. These elements contribute to the article's overall positivity, as they enhance its clarity, credibility, and practical value.