The article is essentially a methodology paper describing, in an objective manner, the programmatic achievements of this oncology unit. It is very much deserving of publication.

My suggestion would be to create a Results section and incorporate some basic data. The future evaluation plan has information on cost, which is probably the number one question an implementer at another site would have. If the authors can disclose data on the number of patients seen in the 3 years they captured in the registry, treatments provided, and mortality, that would strengthen the paper immensely.
