

Review of: "Online learning during the COVID-19 pandemic, lessons learned and what's next?"

Dávid Máté Dr. Hargitai¹

¹ University of Pannonia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The strength of the article is that it reviews the relationship between COVID-19 and higher education in great detail. The literature sources used are new and relevant. The essay gives an adequate overview of the events, their consequences and often draws attention to their social and economic context.

The study is often very wide-ranging, and it would be useful to narrow it down. The article should focus on the problems identified. After the introduction, I missed the research questions that could give the author a guideline.

The lack of a description of the methodology (narrative) was mentioned by several evaluators. This should definitely be improved. Compared to the length of the article, the conclusion section is short and general. This could be expanded a little and the narrative shortened.