Introduction

- The article needs to be restructured based on journal article structure such as Introduction, Literature Review, Method, Results and Discussion, and Conclusion.
- In the introduction, the research problems need to be addressed and explored before coming to the significance of the study.
- The novelty is also absent in the introduction; even there is no description of previous studies on it.

Literature Review

- Most of the subsections in the literature review could not represent the purpose of the study, such as there is no review for destination image, natural environment, and infrastructure.

Method

- The data were out of date since they were collected five years ago.
- There is no information about the sampling technique used in the study, how the sample is determined, and why it is 215 or 196 respondents.
- There is no information about the variables and measurement.
- There is no information about hypotheses testing that will be measured in the study.

Results

- Because there is no information about the variables measured in the study, the author was ambiguous in describing the results of the study.

Discussion

- Describe the discussion based on the hypotheses testing!
- Discuss the findings based on theory, and
- Compare and contrast the findings of the study based on previous studies or related works.

Conclusion

- Highlight the findings and present them in an appropriate way in the conclusion.
