The paper School instability in South Africa: a Systematic Review of Reflections and Experiences for a way forward presents a topic that is not only important but also contemporary. However, I suggest the author(s) to present a more theoretical reflection on the topic. The causes pointed out are relevant but were weakly discussed based on one or more theoretical frameworks. Although the study refers to South Africa, the phenomenon in question is not limited to that country, so it would also be opportune to have a comparative reflection with other cases registered in other realities, contexts, countries.
