This article addresses important issues of disease transmission in healthcare settings and strategies to prevent it.

This article's first and major issue is its concept or lack of methodology. Scientific articles should be strictly defined (clinical trial, observational study, review, etc.) and have adequate methodology (introduction, methods, results, discussion, etc.).

This article doesn't have a clear methodology, and as such, it can't be recommended for publishing in journals without thorough revision. For guidelines on writing review articles, you can check the editorial "So You Want to Write a Narrative Review Article?" by Chaney MA (2021).
