Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article is ambitious, but does not express its full potential.

The title summarizes quite adequately the research topic addressed by the author/s.

In my opinion, the idea of this paper is not too much original owing to a previous study existing on the topic. However, the paper should be rewritten and the introduction misses of a clear understanding on methodology used in the paper connected to literature gap. Moreover, the literature gap is not well-defined.

References should be revised . See for example:

- this citation (Bharadwaj et al., 2013) has a two different references;
- p. 8, line 24, the citation (Colquitt et al., 2019) has a different year in references;
- the citation (D'Aveni, 2009) is absent in References;
- the citation (D'Aveni, Dagnino, Smith, 2009) is absent in References;
- the citation (D'Aveni, 1994) is absent in References.

Furthermore, the following references are absent in the manuscript:

- Drazin, R., & Schoonhoven, C. B. (1996). Community, population, and organization effects on innovation: A multilevel perspective. Academy of management journal, 39(5), 1065-1083.
- KThomas, L. G., & D'Aveni, R. (2009). The changing nature of competition in the US manufacturing sector, 1950—2002. Strategic Organization, 7(4), 387-431.

Lastly, I suggest using only one style for references because some citations are incorrect, i.e. Eisenmann, T., Parker, G., & Van Alstyne, M. (2011). Platform envelopment. Strategic Management Journal, 32(12), 1270-1285.
