I couldn't find any useful information regarding structural equation modeling (SEM) and its applications. Specifically, it was unclear whether the models are powerful enough based on the SEM analysis. The introduction of the model has been presented less clearly, and their previous shortcomings in explanation have not been addressed thoroughly. In order to guarantee the credibility of statements, it is crucial to have a method for evaluating the degree to which they are substantiated by a compelling level of evidence through systematic review and meta-analysis. Could you please provide further details on this matter?
