Review of: "Hasn't the time finally come for the establishment of a World Government?"

Roman Ivashko

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I appreciate Editor Alberto Bedogni's invitation to review. Professor Innocent-Mária V. Szaniszló drew attention to the rather urgent problem of peace, being well versed in the teachings of the Roman-Catholic Church. Pope John XXIII was supposed to be a 'transitional' Pope, who, however, gave impetus to radical changes in the Church that were not expected of him. 'Pacem in Terris' was the last of the 7 encyclicals of Pope John XXIII, as a response to the challenges of social justice (following Pope Leo XIII), ecumenism, ritualism, dogmatics and holiness. The Pope adherented the idea of 'Supreme Authority' or 'World Goverment', perhaps, something like the UN. Was the idea of 'World Goverment' identified with integralism that could alienate other cultures? What are the points of contact between the teachings of Popes John XXIII and John Paul II, canonized at the same time?