

Review of: "Ancient Houses in Ben Tre City: A Multifaceted Approach to Preserve Artistic Architectural Heritage and Boost Local Tourism"

Baya Belmessaoud Boukhalfa¹

¹ École Polytechnique d'Architecture et d'Urbanisme

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper makes significant contributions to the field of cultural preservation by linking it to sustainable tourism development. It serves as a valuable resource for policymakers and conservationists interested in heritage preservation in urban settings. The paper thoroughly explores various facets of the preservation issue, including legal, cultural, and technical aspects. The innovative approach to using tourism as a means to support conservation is well-articulated. The paper is a robust and multifaceted analysis that addresses a critical and often overlooked aspect of cultural heritage preservation. Its interdisciplinary approach is commendable, though it would benefit from deeper methodological details and case-specific analyses.

However, the paper could benefit from more detailed descriptions of the research methodology. While it discusses ancient houses in general, the inclusion of more specific case studies could enhance the paper's depth.