It's a good piece of writing that makes the case that effective smallholder livestock production depends on the veterinary services that are offered in Zimbabwe. The following are some fundamental requirements for a well-structured article that the manuscript's current shape fails to meet:

1. The paper's research questions weren't presented clearly.
2. Your selection criteria should be explained in a separate section devoted to the research design.
3. The literature review part is incredibly disorganized, thus it should be tried to put everything together in one spot.
4. To present a contemporary image of the issue, it is essential to use recent literature.
5. Lack of explanation of facts on public veterinary services, disease reporting systems, main limits, etc.
6. Recommendations should be made in a clear, accurate, current, and beneficial manner.
