

Review of: "'Women come out for less important tasks': Understanding the reality of the gendered transport sector in Karachi through Key-Informant Interviews"

Biju Dharmapalan

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper presents a valuable and timely exploration of the perceptions of transport experts concerning the challenges faced by women in the context of transport and mobility in Karachi, Pakistan. The use of 'conversations with purpose' with key informants in the transport sector adds a qualitative dimension to the study, offering insights into the cultural and behavioral aspects shaping urban transport planning in the region.

The paper can be accepted for publication