Hello everyone

I am here to give my opinion about the article "j".

To begin with I would like to say that the topic covered in the article is quite current and relevant to do research, the text is really nice, but I would like to add some suggestions:

The title falls a little short with respect to what we are going to read, more information could be given in this one. Also, some parts become repetitive, especially when it is stated that some teachers and even students do not have enough training or resources to work under this methodology.

On the other hand, I consider that the article is informative, but does not present solutions to the situation exhibited. Why not present strategies or ways to improve the situation? This would make the article more complete.

Continuing with the logic of complementing the article, why not include some key concepts and their definition, such as e-learning?

Finally, I think that the methodology section also lacks a lot of information, since not much is said about the instruments used and how they were controlled. To conclude, the final part should include aspects that could be improved, what strategies could be planned or implemented to reduce this problem presented in the text and how the article being read could help in future research.
