

Review of: "Agritourism: a source for socio-economic transformation in developing economies"

Brunella Arru<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> University of Sassari

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article proposed by the authors deals with a very interesting topic.

Agritourism can effectively promote rural development, being a key strategy for the diversification of the rural economy.

This paper, however, does not offer a real overview of the agritourism situation in the target place but only offers food for thought that, in my opinion, is in its embryonic stage.

What concrete actions can farmers implement? What concrete actions should policymakers implement?

What is the current situation regarding the numbers of holiday farms and income, and what future prospects?

What are the tourism trends?

These are all questions that the article does not answer but which could certainly increase the value of this document.

In my opinion, the article still has a lot of room for improvement