

Review of: "Participatory budgeting for public involvement in environmental sustainability at a Thai university"

Sharmila Rani<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Multimedia University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

A very interesting article which emphasizes the role of students in environmental sustainability of higher education institutions (HEIs) through participatory budgeting (PB).

Clear statement of methods used and discussion of significant findings in the abstract would boost the uniqueness and importance of the article.

I really like the idea of integrating the environmental sustainability initiatives into an education program within the HEI, as it entails a committed and legitimate approach amongst students as well as the university.

Since the article emphasizes on PB, does it, in any way related to Institutional Collective Action (ICA) (may refer to Kim, S.Y.; Swann, W.L.; Weible, C.M.; Bolognesi, T.; Krause, R.M.; Park, A.Y.; Tang, T.; Maletsky, K.; Feiock, R.C. Updating the institutional collective action framework. Policy Stud. J. 2022, 50, 9–34)

A discussion on how the outcomes of this research correspond with or differ from other similar studies in PB would be interesting and enriching.

Adding a conclusion section with a research agenda will provide a promising platform for future researchers.