Review of: "Digital Literacy in People with Disabilities: An Overview and Narrative Review"

Rita Merhej[1]

1 Haigazian University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Dear author, I have just completed going through the 3rd version of your article, and I can say that there has been a tremendous effort on your part to restructure and reorganize all the previous contents. This is surely not an easy task, considering the huge amount of research and literature that is embedded in this article. For example, adding a table on the Milestones of the History of Computers and PwDs is a very good idea and gives an appealing break to the reader. The five-level model is very well explained, and in a very concise way. I can now see clear headings for all the sections of the paper, which makes the paper much more reader-friendly. Adding a PRISMA chart to describe your literature search process was also a good idea. As for Table 1, it is a very informative table and is definitely a great plus for the original draft.

I think all the editing you have performed is highly commendable; you knew how to capture the key ideas within a shorter, better-organized framework.