The paper investigates the interconnection between megatrends analysis, future research, and the role of think tanks.

The subject is of great interest and relevance as think tanks are playing an increasingly important role in shaping public opinion, policy advice and media.

Section five of paper introduces seven diverse think tanks from different countries and world regions which either explicitly or implicitly engage in megatrends analysis and future research. This section could be expanded through a larger sample and a more accurate comparative analysis among think tanks.

The paper fills a gap in the academic literature by analysing the evolution of megatrends and future research.

Furthermore, the research carried out by the authors certainly opens up to further reflections.
