

Review of: "Lived Experience of School Leaders in Supervising during Remote Teaching"

Abdul Nazeer<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Middle East College

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The experience of Philippine school administrators during COVID-19 is described in depth in this article. The emphasis placed on the difficulties encountered when switching from on-campus to online coursework. The numerous facets of difficulties are covered, such as controlling emotional states, incorporating cutting-edge technology tools, and training teachers. An understanding of the implications for the process of teaching and learning during the epidemic has been made. I recommended looking into more questionnaires about best practices created during this time, such as methods for teaching and evaluating students, the finest teaching resources, etc. The report should emphasize more on benefits of the lessons learned from the abrupt shift in the teaching and learning process. I believe that one task to be carried out from this study going ahead is to improve the results section with clearer findings. Finally, to ensure that everything is in the right order, the reference and citation styles need to be double checked and proofread.