This interesting article is of tremendous importance for columbian ecosystem management.

I would suggest some modifications:

-In the introduction: You could add some perspectives about the fact that ecosystem valuation has been carried out worldwide but there is still a lack of data in some tropical countries

I think that the notion of biomes and ecosystems that are associated with your method of remnant natural resources should be detailed in the introduction. To you, what is the difference between biome and ecosystem? Maybe a definition of both terms could be appropriate because normally a biome is a macroecosystem (a vast region with the same climate such as "the tundra")
