

Review of: "The Role of Women's Business Performance in Promoting Sustainable Development"

Ana Maria Bocaneala

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Congratulations on this study! I am grateful and glad that the study focuses on women's entrepreneurship, especially women's role in promoting sustainable development. The study by itself has a very relevant and timely topic. I very much appreciate the method of study chosen and the results found. Suggestions for improvement of this study relate to the need to further substantiate the literature part of the study by adding studies that exemplify the role of women entrepreneurship in promoting sustainable development. Unfortunately, the part about sustainable development and what it implies is not exemplified at all. Also, for a better understanding of the role of businesswomen in promoting sustainable development, I would see it as opportune to insert some examples of good practices in the field, examples that support sustainable development. As far as the conclusions are concerned, I would also recommend a correlation between the results and these examples of good practices. There needs to be a better correlation of the results of the study with what the three pillars of sustainable development (economic, social, and environmental) imply.