I found the paper and the topic very interesting. I am not an expert in the context of psychology and philosophy, although I love both. I have some suggestion about the structure of the paper. Sometimes I have found the order of the sections not uniform. For example, I would put the hypothesis section in the introduction, may be a sub-section in the introduction with the justification and the hypothesis. It is important for the reader understand immediately where you want to go. I would create a material and methods section where to describe the design, statistics, etc. It would be great if you can add some figures. It is not clear to me the duration of the experiment.

For the rest, great work!
