The covid-19 has been well studied in the rapidly growing international publications of the last two years, and now we are talking about it mainly in the context of two important disciplines, one is medicine, mainly for scientific reasons, and the second is public administration, mainly for policy and political reasons, And this is not a good presentation of policy or politics and it's more of a narrative emphasis. There are some key factors, which have been mentioned in the previous literature. To sum up, I think the article should be modified from four aspects.

The first is to enhance the theoretical awareness of the article, what kind of theory is used to explain the implementation of public health.

The second is to enhance the scientific consciousness of the article, which should be supported by certain data and research methods.

The third is to improve the innovative consciousness of the article. What is the unique academic contribution the article brings to us? What are the ideas that inspire others? These have to be very clear.

The fourth is to enhance the awareness of academic dialogue and dialogue with some current classical literature.
