

Review of: "The Cost of Being a Celebrity on Mental Health"

Clifford C. Uroh

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The concept of celebrity is widely used in your study for sports men and women, musical artistes, movie actors, etc. These different groups do not experience mental health issues the same way. It might be good to point this out by reviewing some studies.

"As mentions Shahghasemi (2022) in his course for Celebrity Studies at the University of Tehran: On social media, when celebrities receive hundreds of positive feedbacks and one negative, they end up desperately mad at that one negative comment. " This statement can benefit from proper citation and proofreading to remove some grammatical errors.

"World-renowned actor Robin Williams completed suicide in 2014 after a long-term battle with depression and addiction." Change the word to committed from completed.

The article clearly reveals the struggles of being a celebrity in the new age of social media.
There's no recommendation.