The abstract part is not inclusive. The abstract should include a short and clear summary of the entire study (such as the problem or research gap, objectives, methodology, findings, and policy implications).

The research gap or the contribution of the study should be well discussed.

The study is not supported with major theories in the area.

The number of reviewed empirical evidences is very few, which makes conclusions difficult, so you have to review more recent literature in the area.

The methodology part should include issues related to the time scope of empirical studies, sample of empirical studies, type of review system you followed, and geographic scope of the reviewed empirical evidences.

The findings should be well discussed using both theoretical and empirical evidences.
