

Review of: "A Case for Nature in Long-Haul Space Exploration"

Christer Fuglesang<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Royal Institute of Technology

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

A nice and well-written article about an important issue regarding future long-duration space missions which is not so often discussed. Based on existing research they make a good case that planning for crewed space journeys going to the Moon, and even more important to Mars, should include aspects on how to include simulated experiences of nature. These could be done in a low-cost manner. I can only agree.