

Review of: "Neuropsychiatric and Social Consequences of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder in Females"

Philippa Fibert

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article is an extremely thorough compendium of the literature regarding ADHD in females, with many useful references. Whilst mostly immaculately referenced, the odd anecdotal interjection seems out of place. My suggestion would be to leave the opinions to emerge from the next research stage.

Because there is no accompanying novel research, in my opinion it needs restructuring. My suggestions are:

1. a descriptive, literature review of the consequences of ADHD in females.
2. the article (in shortened form) could form the introduction section of the next research to be conducted (described in the Conclusion).
3. to re-format the article as an opinion piece, and dispense with the format of introduction, methods, results, discussion and conclusion. The Discussion section does not appear much different from the Introduction section. It is usual to discuss the results, but of course there are no results to discuss.