The title is too long. Can the author try to shorten it and still maintain

On methodology, under study population, can enough information about the population be added? What kind of community was this? Their ages or any specific characteristics should be added.

Eligibility criteria are not clearly written.

The whole methodology section is poorly written. Can the authors look at this section and work on it? Remember, readers must be able to read and understand, and researchers must be able to duplicate the same study following the same methodology, only if it is written clearly. Explain why the questionnaire was written in English first and then translated into Amharic. Is Amharic the common language? Explain the steps well in the data collection procedure: how was the data collected? Were the questionnaires handed to the study population to respond and return later, or was it face to face? Where did this happen, and who was collecting the data? How long was the process?

I think a table could have presented the results clearly.

Limitations of the study: we do not start a sentence with "because."

The authors must revise the manuscript before it is accepted for publication. It is a very good study.
