

Review of: "The two sides of Experienced Crisis: Enabling and preventing Coping strategies during Covid-19 Pandemic"

Barbara Siuta-Tokarska¹

¹ Cracow University of Economics

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

In my opinion, the article „The two sides of experienced crisis: enabling and preventing coping strategies during covid-19 pandemic” is very interesting. However, I have some suggestions, which – I hope – will make this article better if the author takes them into consideration:

1. The title of the article could be more specific, so You can add: (...) enabling and preventing coping social strategies...
In the beginning, I thought that this article concerns enterprise strategies.
2. I would suggest giving information in the Abstract that this article is included in the social sciences.
3. In the Abstract the reader should clearly be informed about the aim and the value added of this scientific work.
4. In the Introduction section there are many questions which – in fact – should have direct answers in the last part of the article.
5. I have some comments regarding methodology: The Author made in-depth interviews with Greek people in Iceland, the UK, Belgium, Austria, Denmark, Germany, France, Netherlands, the USA, Japan, Hong Kong, and Bahrain. There are different continents (Europe, America and Asia – what about Australia, where people really had very high restrictions?) and in those continents were mostly other restrictions with Covid-19. Let's think about taking only interviews from Europe (of course, the restrictions were not exactly the same, but more common).
6. A very interesting point of view would be if we had information who of these respondents lost a family member due to the pandemic. It could have the influence of his/her seeing the two sides of crisis.

I wish the Author all the best and publishing this article in the significant journal.

All the best,

Reviewer