The article titled "Analyze the Influence of Socio-Economic Conditions of Parents on the Personality of Christian Teachers in Tambaksari District, Surabaya" by Adi Prasetyo Wibowo et al. reports on a quantitative study aimed at investigating the impact of socio-economic conditions and the background of the parents of Christian teachers in Tambaksari District, Surabaya, on their personality. While the article provides a concise and clear description of the study, it has some weaknesses that need to be addressed.

First, the article lacks a comprehensive literature review that can provide the reader with a background on the subject matter. This leaves the reader with little understanding of the research gap the study aims to fill, the theoretical framework underpinning the study, and the prior research on which the hypotheses are based. A good literature review would have provided context and justified the rationale for the study.

Second, the article's research methodology is not adequately described. While the article states that the study uses a quantitative research design, it fails to provide details on the sampling method, the sample size, and the data collection instruments used. Moreover, the article does not elaborate on the statistical tests employed to analyze the data, which raises questions about the reliability and validity of the results.

Third, the article's discussion of the results is overly simplistic and lacks depth. The authors provide a brief summary of the results of the statistical analyses, but they do not explain the meaning of the findings or their implications for the teaching profession. The article would have been more informative if the authors had provided a more detailed analysis of the results and their relevance to the study's objectives.

Fourth, the article lacks a conclusion that summarizes the findings and provides recommendations for future research or policy implications. A conclusion would have helped to tie together the various components of the article and provided the reader with a clear takeaway message.

Overall, while the article provides some insights into the relationship between the socio-economic conditions and the background of parents of Christian teachers in Tambaksari District, Surabaya, on their personality, it falls short in several areas. The article's weaknesses in the literature review, research methodology, discussion of results, and conclusion make it less valuable to readers interested in this subject matter.
