The article's subject is interesting; however, I see some issues that need discussion and improvement:

- I would suggest a well-defined urban public space be mentioned and analyzed by the authors as if it were talking to designers and planners; it will be needed to have more clarification towards the elements used in the design process, as well as address the mentioned threads in solid pictures from this public space.
- I see the results as very broad and still need to be clarified by whom the research wants to endorse.
