

Review of: "Diversity and Inclusion for Innovation-Led Growth"

L.S. Guruprasad

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article very well brings out the linkages between innovation led economy through Diversity and inclusion. An innovation-led economy that embraces diversity and inclusion is a powerful combination that can drive significant social and economic progress. When diversity and inclusion are integrated into the fabric of an innovation-led economy, it creates a more robust, creative, and equitable environment that benefits society as a whole.

To create an innovation-led economy that embraces diversity and inclusion, policymakers, business leaders, and communities must work together to implement inclusive practices and policies. This involves ensuring equal access to education, training, and economic opportunities for individuals from all backgrounds. Additionally, organizations must actively promote diversity and inclusion in hiring practices, leadership roles, and decision-making processes. This article brings out the linkages between all these factors.

However, the intext citations would prove these view points more authenticated. The article covers the latest facts ad challenges but however the solution to all these challenges is lime lighted as "Technology". However, there is a need to change the mind set of every citizen to acaheive societal driven solutions. And this comes only through Higher Education. Which the article has brough out this point very well.