Review of: "Post-Pandemic Reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: What We Know Now That We Wish We Knew Then"

Mercy E. Ogbari[1]

1 Covenant University

Title: Post-Pandemic Reflections from Sub-Saharan Africa: What We Know Now That We Wish We Knew Then.

- The title: the title is apt as after a phenomenon change that affected the world, there should be some insights that would prepare people ahead of the future in order to handle similar future occurrence with much confidence leading to better experiences.
- Abstract: the abstract is more or less written in a friction style and not in the format of research article presentation; where the objective/purpose is highlighted and the clear methodology mentioned as well the findings and recommendations clearly stated. Authors could re-look and adjust where necessary.
- The study has no outlined objectives as well hypotheses. Authors should look into that
- What exactly is the study trying to express? The message is majorly by observation and not rooted in deep research techniques/ methodology.
- The study does not follow the clear-cut dimensions of literature; no conceptual clarifications, no empirical dimensions as well no theoretical underpinnings. The authors could try and expand on these to give the work a robust lift.
- Methodological strategy is completely missing; Issues of research design, method, philosophy, population, sampling frame, techniques etc. are not stated.
- How was the study carried out? What led to the study? Justification of the different issues surrounding the study were not stated categorically.
- Results not stated etc.
- Communication is clear and language is technical, which is commendable.
- Contributions to knowledge is faint has some logical in-depth were missing due to lack of strong research undertone that were not followed in preparing the work.
- The discussions were normal and generalist in nature and not directive in addressing any specified objective.