Review of: "Digital Mapping of Resilience and Academic Skills in the Perspective of Society 5.0 for Higher Education Level Students"

Aleff Nordin[1]

1 Universiti Malaysia Terengganu

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall, this article makes a significant contribution to the understanding of how students navigate the challenges of online learning during the Covid-19 pandemic. The combination of qualitative and quantitative methods, along with the development of a reliable measuring instrument, strengthens the study's validity. This research could potentially inform educational policies and interventions to better support students in similar contexts.