Three suggestions:

- First, separate the introduction from the literature review, which are now mixed together. What's more, when doing the literature review, the authors ought to categorize the existing literature and add subtitles according to the categorized themes.
- Second, the three hypotheses (better written like H1, H2 and H3), which appear now in one location, had better appear respectively after the relevant parts of the literature review.
- Finally, the first hand-data of the 50 separate studies ought to be described in more detail within the part of Research Methods and Techniques.
