The article "The imperative of a comprehensive One Health approach for mosquito-borne disease control in Indonesia" addresses a very important topic in the control of mosquito (as well as other vectors)-borne diseases. In this review, the author gives good depth to the general understanding of the one-health approach and its importance to the concerted efforts to control these vectors and vector-borne diseases. However, I feel the article is a bit too general and somehow fails to provide a completely focused perspective on the issue from an Indonesian standpoint. I therefore suggest that the author provide a more specific and focused perspective, highlighting key examples and cases of peculiar challenges and possible solutions in Indonesia. I believe this will help readers understand clearly the challenges in Indonesia regarding the control of mosquito-borne diseases and fully appreciate how a comprehensive one-health approach would greatly impact the efforts to control these vectors and associated diseases.
