

Review of: "Determinants of Women Entrepreneurs' Business Performance: Evidence from Micro and Small-Scale Enterprises in Arba Minch Town, Southern Ethiopia"

Ardianus Laurens Paulus¹

¹ Universitas Katolik Widya Mandala Surabaya

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The storyline of this research phenomenon and issues is very interesting to read regarding women's entrepreneurship in developing countries and can be an example for future research.

However, some things that are interesting but missed from this article are:

- 1) I did not find a theoretical basis in the background of this research as an idea that supports the relationship between the variables studied
- 2) Hypothesis development needs to be explained to support allegations that emerge from the literature where the influence between variables will be tested
- 3) The discussion is still limited to explaining the results of statistical tests. It has not explained how it relates to previous research compared to the results of this research.
- 4) Theoretical and managerial implications need to be emphasized in this article

Hopefully this can be input for future work to produce articles and research that are useful and increase insight