Additional Comments to the Author: Howbeit, this study is striking, it needs some revisions. The revisions are as follows:

In the method section, please state inclusion and exclusion criteria.

The diagnosis of MC should be clearly described based on guidelines.

It's not necessary to describe the medical history of patients in the results section without analysis.

Please provide details about the Imiquimod dosage.

In the discussion, you declared that "a correlation between an abnormal cytology and HPV (+) was found in 3 cases," but you didn't provide any details in the results or methods.

The discussion could benefit from a more extensive comparison of the study's findings with previous research in the field. This would help contextualize the results and highlight their novelty, similarities, or discrepancies compared to prior studies.

The Discussion section does not thoroughly address the limitations of the study. It is important to acknowledge any inherent biases, methodological constraints, or potential confounders that might affect the validity or generalizability of the results.

The conclusion section does not mention possible avenues for future research based on the study's findings. It is essential to identify areas that require further investigation, propose potential research questions, or suggest directions for improving interventions or methodologies.

The article can benefit from a good edit in regard to English usage, spelling, and punctuation.
