Abstract

Usually, an abstract should have

Problem Statement: The problem statement needs to be clarified: What is the main issue the author wants to address here? The author needs to highlight this to teachers and parents, and only a little is to say about the students.

Objectives: What is the primary purpose? On the teachers, parents, or the students?

Method: The research used [specific method], which involved [particular steps or procedures]. The data was then analyzed using [specific data analysis method].

Data findings: The author must highlight the main data findings that lead to the implications.

Conclusion: It should be concise but sharp.

The reference does not need to be cited in the abstract; it should be in the introduction or literature review.

Keywords: need to add: emergency e-learning

Introduction:

1. Please provide some information about the SHAD Platform. The first time mentioned should be in the full name, then followed by the abbreviation.
2. The pandemic has brought about a paradigm shift in teaching and learning worldwide. With the need for social distancing and remote work, online education has become the new norm. It is now more important than ever to explore new and innovative ways to make online education effective and accessible.

Literature Review:

There are research questions, but do we need the research objectives? I think so.

Theoretical Framework:

1. Does the first figure not have a title? It is pretty perplexing, so the author should have an explanation for that.

Method:

1. The text does not say that the total number of participants is correct.
2. How was the interview done? Physically or online?
3. How does the author ensure the three homogenous groups when the selected samples are using the convenience sampling method?

Data Analysis:

1. The author only shows the final themes that were extracted from the interviews.
2. In Table 3, should 'codes' be 'themes emerging'?

Discussions:

1. The main objectives should have been mentioned clearly in the introduction part.
2. The primary objective of the current research was to investigate the psychological impact of students' interactions with parents and teachers during emergency e-learning from the perspectives of teachers and parents. The author should highlight this.

Implications and Limitations:

1. Another implication is the potential of e-learning as one of the leading platforms for teaching and learning, even though it will not face any significant disruption in the future.
