As an article of reflection and divulgation, it is very good. I would suggest more a broadening of topics within it, specifically those related to the solutions that can be given to the problem. The East has a complex socio-economic dynamic that has more to do with a deep class division and the non-existence of a middle class that complicates the panorama; this is an important aspect since inequality and the effects of a type of economy of privileges depend on it. Something that continues to be repeated in a different way in the West.
