The article is actually a research proposal to study the awareness of sexual/reproductive health addressed to school students in India. It did not state any findings; while present a raw questionnaire for the survey. It is better to review related literatures and develop sort of scientific framework to do this research. The target of 50K respondents is very good and convincing; yet without further explanation about its sampling techniques and some other consideration to represent the whole population (i.e. India is of course a very populated country!), this research project is not ready yet to be conducted any time soon.

Best, M
