Very interesting research, which is valuable in the context of the general lack of noise detection and research. The overall framework is clear and concise, and the causes of noise are also demonstrated. However, academically speaking, it cannot be called a rigorous research work, as this requires a clear scientific contribution. The phenomena and causes shown in this article can be deduced. At the same time, the comparison of the two school locations does not make a universal scientific contribution. I suggest that the author can select more points and conduct more in-depth analysis.
