The article addresses a very interesting and topical subject. However, from the beginning it is not clear what kind of pupils or students you are writing about. For example, the sentence "However, a dishonest student usually becomes a dishonest student" does not make clear the level of education. It can be assumed that it refers to basic level pupils who become higher level students.

The article would gain more interest if a survey of a sample of higher education students was carried out, for example, in order to have some data of their own to analyze.

It could also be interesting to compare and benchmark countries in similar situations. Here are some links that I hope could be useful: <https://dialnet.unirioja.es/servlet/articulo?codigo=6063464>; <https://dialnet.unirioja.es/servlet/articulo?codigo=6815948>

There is also a lot of material and bibliography from anti-plagiarism software platforms such as Turnitin.
