The topic of discussion in the paper is unique and has great importance in the domain of social sciences. The paper is well planned. Some suggestions and corrections may be incorporated.

1. The author should conduct a hypothesis-wise literature review so that each of the Chi-square test results is adequately backed by literature. The outcomes of the results should be backed by the existing domain of research, which is missing.
2. It was mentioned by the authors that the study included respondents aged 18 years. But as per the law of the land in India, a female is eligible for marriage when she reaches the age of 21 years. Needs correction in that line.
3. In case of funding, the statement is not clear whether the authors received funding or not.
