The article is well drafted, but there are a lot of grammatical mistakes. Revise by removing complex and ambiguous statements and by re-framing.

1. The title can be revised, for example, 'Immunity-Boosting Properties of Mango.'
2. The abstract can be revised by stating the possible outcomes of the review, for example, 'This study will urge researchers to extensively analyze the bioactives in mango for different properties.'
3. The introduction, third paragraph, 1st line needs a reference.
4. While citing references in the text, mention the author name as 'According to so and so et. al '
5. Either mention the names of the authors in the sentence or re-frame the sentence such that 'Effect of stage of ripening on the bio-accessibility of beta carotene has been investigated [28].' (Note: The original sentence is also acceptable in some contexts, but this revision follows standard grammar rules.)
6. Revise section 3 with more information related to techniques in characterization of immunomodulatory properties of bioactives rather than a very basic overview of the immune system.

The overall article is scientifically interesting but lacks technical details. Literature on methods of characterization for immunomodulation and how such data on mango extracts is available can be stressed upon.
