

Review of: "When did post-truth begin? From climate change denial to war-mongering nationalism"

Cristian Soler Roca

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The text makes a good explanation of the relationship between climate change denial and the nationalism of certain political sectors in the US, as well as the strength that large corporations have to deny scientific advances and create currents against them to favor their economic interests.

However, I agree with other reviewers in points of formal improvement such as an unclear structure and a somewhat excessive length of the text, being repetitive in some points.

In addition to that, I would suggest that it may be of great interest to delve into the issue of echo chambers formed on the internet and that combine in their information the propaganda in favor of nationalist conservatism and the denial of climate change. As well as talking about the denial of climate change and its relationship with conspiracy theories that deny science. And in turn the relationship between conservatism and conspiracy theories.
